Funds for Arkansas City Schools Up; Enrollment Down

Enrollment down 7 percent since 1993, Funding up by half

(WICHITA) – School funding has been the topic of political conversation around Kansas this legislative session. While we have not yet seen the final resolution of the funding debate, policy makers and the public should step back and appreciate how much financial support the public has already given to schools.

A new policy brief from the Flint Hills Center for Public Policy examines taxpayer support for Arkansas City Public Schools (USD 470) since 1993, and finds that while enrollment in the district is down, funding is up. Attached is the policy brief for your review.

“Student enrollment in USD 470 has declined 6.8 percent since 1993,” says John R. LaPlante, education policy fellow of the Wichita-based think tank. “Even as the district has had fewer students to teach, its total support has actually increased 51 percent. Per-pupil funding is up even more, at 62 percent.”

For the 2003-2004 school year, per-pupil spending was $7,980.

We all want the best possible education for Kansas children; however, the current system is not taking us there. Let’s not blame the legislators, then, if they are reluctant to escalate spending levels even more. It’s time that the public, and students themselves, receive the benefits of fostering increased competition through family choice.
